Day 2 Drive into the Okavango Delta

The Okavango Delta also referred to as ‘Africa’s Last Eden’. It is one of Africa’s most beautiful and well preserved ecosystems. The Okavango Delta is affected by seasonal flooding with flood water from Angola reaching the Delta between March and June, peaking in July. This peak coincides with Botswana’s dry season resulting in great migrations of plain game from the dry hinterland. Your first night camping in the Moremi Game Reserve will be an unforgettable start to your journey; with the game drives and camp fire to add to the excitement.

Overnight: Standard camping

Day 3 At Moremi Game Reserve

Wake up in a wonderland and let your breath be taken away by the striking sunrise and the smell of the African bush. Botswana: Botswana has many regional characteristics that differ - from fertile areas in the East to vast desert in the centre and South and a vast delta in the North-West. This creates extremes of temperatures and highly variable rainfall.

Zambia: The main rainy season is from January to March. The rain is widespread and generally falls in the form of thunderstorms; grass tends to be long and there is more water about which makes game viewing more dispersed.
